The Common Drinking Cup.

There is a disposition throughout the State to obey the law passed by the Legislature against the use of the common drinking cup, and it is better for the health of our people that this is so. The observance of the law will certainly assist in preventing the spread of diseases, some of them of the most loathsome character, men afflicted with communicable disease of the very worst sort have been seen to use the public cups at the pumps in this city, with great probability that such disease has been spread in this manner. The State Board of Health, with no possible selfish aim or intent, has condemned the public drinking cup, and other States and cities are strongly condemning and absolutely prohibiting its use.

It was expected that the law would provoke some opposition, but this opposition came from the unthinking and will die out. It was passed for the common good, to protect our people from disease, and its wholesome provisions should be enforced and obeyed.

H. H. MOORE.

Big Sandy Youth Making a Success at Winchester.

The following letter and clipping were sent us by Steve K. Vaught, editor of the Winchester, Ky., Democrat:

Brother Conley:—
The enclosed clipping contains a speech delivered by H. H. Moore, a young member of the Winchester Bar, but formerly a Louisa boy. The address has made such a "hit" here and especially so when the age of the young man is considered that I take the liberty of sending it to you, feeling confident that you would reciprocate the kindness if the occasion was offered. Young Moore is making a brilliant success here and we congratulate your town upon producing such a competent youngster. We all have very high hopes for him and feel quite sure he'll not disappoint us. He has written some splendid articles for my paper.

Very sincerely yours,
Steve K. Vaught, Editor.
Mr. H. H. Moore, the youngest member of the local bar, delivered at the Methodist church Wednesday evening an eloquent address which was highly praised by all who heard it, both on account of its composition and delivery. The subject was "The Lawyer and the Golden Rule."

The Speech.
I consider myself fortunate in having this opportunity of speaking to you and I feel profoundly grateful for the honor but I would rather an older lawyer had been chosen because he could have dealt with this subject. "The Lawyer and the Golden Rule," from the experience of actual practice, while I, a mere fledgling in the great legal field, must necessarily speak of the untried theories of a youthful imagination.

In my opinion there is no more noble profession than the law with the possible exception of the ministry. The blind goddess of justice, the emblem of our profession stands with perfectly balanced scales ever ready to mete out justice, equal and exact, to all alike, and if this end is not attained it is because her purposes are enmeshed in the toils of selfishness or shattered by the parasites of corruption.

In no walks of life could the golden rule more fittingly be used in the professional motto because in no business is there such a chance to take advantage of your fellowman and trample under foot the divine precepts of man's Creator.

Honesty and truth, the twin virtues without which character would be a barren waste, pay no larger dividend in any calling and kindness and love, the commendable traits of every Christian, crown the lives of no men more completely than members of the law.

It is a source of regret to the followers of Blackstone and Kent for the laymen to judge the legal profession from some of its members and measure its standard by their efficiency, or rather their inefficiency.

You must view the profession as a whole. You must stand where you can see a majority of its members engaged in life's engrossing battles. You must study its history which began before the days of Justinian and the lawgivers of Rome and has continued through the cycle's sweep of years until the dawn of the twentieth century.

By doing this you will convince yourself that the legal profession is one of renown and that it has contributed to the world its quota of worthy characters whose achievements we all delight to honor.

While it is true that the ministry may well boast of her Wesley, her Calvins, her Whitfields and Campbells, and science mentions with acclaim her Newtons and Spencers, her Marconis and Edisons, the law feels a filial pride in her Lincolns and Kents, her Cokes and Marshalls, her Websters and Clays, men who have crossed the raging seas of life and have anchored safe on honor's shore, tributes to their profession and compliments to their Creator.

While it is true that there are members of our profession who have but little regard for truth and honor and in the furtherance of their contemptible schemes besmirch the profession to which they belong it might also be mentioned as a truth that even within the sacred provinces of the ministry such vermin may be found who screen hypocrisy behind their sacerdotal robes thus bringing into disrepute the calling of their Maker.

The hyster and the pettifogger are as much out of place in the temple of justice as the hypocrite and infidel in the house of God.

It is true that the lawyer may not win the greatest wealth from the honest pursuit of his profession yet, he, as other God-fearing men, is pleased to know that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches and loving favor rather than silver and gold."
The golden rule is commanding "that you do unto others that which you would have others do unto you," is a direct, positive and unequivocal command while the converse statement is the maxim of the law "do not unto others that which you would not have others do unto you."

Some men doubt the practicability of the golden rule in the law; I think it practicable. Some people do our profession wrong by thinking its basic principles inconsistent with the golden rule; I deny the inconsistency and am unable to see the reasons for their thoughts. Some unthoughtfully cast aspersions upon our members by saying a majority of them are of doubtful honesty while in the light of history and statistical facts a smaller percentage of lawyers have proven traitors to principle than any other class.

Occasions frequently arise that place lawyers in most tempting positions. Oftentimes they have the opportunity to stray from the paths of uprightness and pluck from the fields of dishonesty the fruit of ill-gotten gains. Many times the chance is offered them to take advantage of an unwary opponent and reap a rich harvest at his expense. And sometimes through a technicality they have the power to knock to pieces the structure of an opposing counsel and build a victory upon its ruin.

Upon such occasions as these there could not be found in my opinion a more fitting guide than the divine edict of the golden rule "do unto others that which you would have others do unto you."

HOME CIRCLE COLUMN.

COLUMN DEDICATED TO TIRED MOTHERS AS THEY JOIN THE HOME CIRCLE AT EVENING TIDE.

Our Schools.

While this paper has always been a warm friend to the schools of our town it intends to take a deeper interest in them during the ensuing year. We believe it is the duty of every citizen to take a live interest in our schools. During the years that are past, scores of our young people have stepped out of school's life into school. Would that we could in this issue of our paper place before its readers the familiar face of each and every one, but such is among the impossibilities, for Grim Death, on his white horse, has thinned the ranks and as "Death loves a shining mark," many of the most promising fell before reaching the noon-day of life, but we can assist in keeping green their memories. Our school home! What words fall upon the ear with so much music in their cadence as those which recall the scenes of school days now numbered among the memories of the past. Intervening years have not dimmed the vivid colorings with which memory has adorned those joyous days.

While we all graduate in much the same manner, how different has the wheel of fortune turned. Some with plaintive tongues have had to walk in lowly vales of life's weary way, others in loftier hymns have sung of nothing but joy, as they have trodden the mountain top; but no matter how near the summit or base of the mountain of fame you will meet with a graduate from our schools, you meet with one who is a credit to society. "As the twig is bent, so is the tree 'inclined,'" and habits were formed under the moulding power of a moral atmosphere which seems to permeate the schools of our little city, which stay by one through life. Our school life is indeed the golden link that binds youth to age, and he is still but a child, however time may have furrowed his cheek or silvered his brow who can yet recall, with a softening heart, the happy school days passed in this city.

Fourth of July.

Let every reader of this column plan for a jolly time on the Fourth. We live too fast in America. We have not enough holidays—not enough resting places—not enough intermission in our work-day world. It were better if oftener to have laid aside its tools—traffic and trade stopped, now and then, and to consider its aim and end.

There must be an oasis in every desert. The black Sierras has its sunlit valleys. There are smiling nooks, even among the Cordilleras. Halting places they are, great rocks and their shadows, even in the dreariest land. He who builds up a shelter for the storm-beaten and foot-weary pilgrim over the road traced by the "great caravan" is a benefactor to his race and his memories should be cherished while holidays are observed.

Holiday time! Who would care to know why and whence came the custom. Enough to know that care performers must smooth his wrinkled front, and fun and frolic for the time rule the hour. It were folly not to enjoy the glimpses of sunshine that come through the cloud rifts, short lived and evanescent though they be. They prove that there is brightness beyond—that no clouds are so dense but stray beams may penetrate them.

Rosy faces, wreathed and joyous, welcome the festive season. With its merriments, its reminders, its regrets, and its hopes, comes the happy holiday. It is well that the ancient builders set up mile posts on the highway of time, else it were a dull and tiresome road.

Don't Forgive Wives.

The leader of Rockefeller's church at Cleveland, Ohio, recently took the above heading for his text, and he asked his hearers to put the following don'ts up in their wives' mirrors:

Don't marry a man for a living, but for love. Manhood without money is better than money without manhood.
Don't overdress nor underdress; common sense is sometimes better than style.

A wife with a hobble skirt and a husband with patched trousers make a poor pair. A woman can throw more out of a window with a spoon than a man can put into the cellar with a shovel.

How Not to Run a House.

Don't think that the way to run a house is to run away from it. It is wrong to go around lecturing other women on how to bring up children, while you are neglecting your own.

Don't tell your troubles to your neighbors. They have enough of their own. Fight it out with yourself if it takes all summer.

Don't nag. The saloonkeeper is always glad to welcome your husband with a smile.

Don't try to get more out of a looking glass than you put into it. Nature's sunshine is better for a woman's beauty than man's powders and paints.

Don't forget to tell the truth, especially to the conductor about the age of your child; honesty is worth more to you and them than a nickel. A boy who is 8 years old at home and 6 on the cars will soon learn other things that are not so.

Don't forget that home is a woman's kingdom, where she reigns as queen. To be a mother of a Lincoln, a Garfield, or a McKinley, is to be the mother of a prince.
